Milk Sponge Cake.

WO eggs, beaten well; 1 cup sugar, beaten with eggs; six tablespoons cold milk, 1 teaspoon cream tartar, 1/2 teaspoon soda, sifted into 11/2 cups of flour; salt and flavoring if you like. This is originally a jelly roll, but I often bake it in a loaf. Real Vegetable Soup.

Cut two large potatoes in fine blocks, add some remnants of chopped celery and parsley, two cups of canned tomatoes or the left-over stewed tomatoes of the previous meal; plenty of water for the amount of soup required; salt and pepper to taste; cook all together until vegetables are very well done. Fry a large onion until yellow but not brown in a large spoonful of butter, add a large spoonful of flour, cook until smooth, pour the soup over it gradually until smooth and pour back into the kettle and boil up once. You cannot tell it was cooked without meat.

Chicago Doughnuts.

HESE doughnuts are pronounced "fine:" Two cups of hot mashed potato, 4 tablespoons of shortening. 3 cups of sugar, 4 eggs, 3 cups of milk, 5 teaspoons of baking powder and flour enough to make the usual consistency of doughnut dough. Make a cream of potatoes, shortening, sugar and eggs; then add the milk, some salt and nutmeg for flavor. Then sift about 4 cups of flour with the baking powder and add to mixture and as much more flour as Sweet Potato Biscuit.

Boil a large sweet potato, mash while hot, work in two eggs and flour enough for a dough, add one-quarter ounce of yeast and let rise over night. In the morning work in a spoonful of butter, mould in small biscuit, let them rise to double their size and bake in a quick oven. Good for breakfast and tea.
